Then, as little track houses were being built, the safe houses' open field was surrounded with houses in which lived lots of kids. So the big field around the safe house became a neat place for the kids and Dads to play ball.

The police station was busy with frustrated bank robbers. They had been coming and going all day, bringing in deliveries, trying to get through the locks in the safe house. Finally they brought in a cannon in the back of the truck. Some were sure someone would notice and call the cops. But they were busy playing ball.

Now they were in the police station, trying to cut themselves a deal for when the attempted heist of the safe house was found out and, as known as expert bank robbers, they would be hauled in. "I told them that bringing in that cannon was a dumb idea. But none of us could get any where with those safe house locks."

The cannon was brought in on an open truck. They were getting too anxious to

Art Engagement from the Beach Museum of Art

Compare/Contrast ... The two artworks shown are from two artists who lived in Kansas for many years. John Frederick Helm, Jr. and Norma Bassett Hall were both printmakers and often used scenes from the Kansas landscape in their compositions. As you spend time closely looking at these two artworks that appear to be very similar what do you notice that is the same? There are several differences, too. For example, one is a watercolor painting, and the other is a screen print. What else do you observe is different?

be careful. But the crowds were busy playing ball.

In the safe house, they aimed the cannon at the safe door, and fired. It made a hole, but not big enough for anyone to squeeze through. They fired the cannon again. This time the hole in the safe door was big enough to get through. But there was still a problem: Everything inside the safe was blown to smithereens.

The safe house was patched up and continued to do business. Families in the little houses continued to enjoy living where there was such a nice place for their kids and Dads to play ball.

Salute the designer of the safe house locks.
